

DESCRIBING, PROMOTING, AND VALUING EXCELLENT CLINICAL TEACHING

Monday, January 13
12:00 p.m. - 1:00 p.m.
Virtual

In this webinar, a panel of clinical educators from the College of Human Medicine will share some thinking about what makes clinical teaching excellent. Rather than providing a “how-to” on teaching in particular clinical contexts, this panel will take a step back and share thinking about what makes clinical teaching in any context excellent, what kinds of evidence help us understand if clinical teaching is excellent, and what kinds of processes support the development of excellent clinical teaching.

The panelists are:

- Jennifer Edwards-Johnson, DO, MPH, Associate Professor – Health Programs, Department of Family Medicine and Associate Dean for Community Academic Programs/Community Assistant Dean, Flint
- Jon Gold, MD, FAAP, Professor – Health Programs, Department of Pediatrics and Human Development and Director, CHM Academy and Learning Societies
- Andrew Jameson, MD, FACP, FIDSA, AAHIVS, Associate Professor – Non-prefix, Department of Medicine and Clerkship Director, Internal Medicine
- Bryan Judge, MD, FACMT, Professor – Non-Prefix, Department of Emergency Medicine and Emergency Medicine MCE Director
- Chelsea Pote, MD, Assistant Professor – Health Programs, Department of Family Medicine and Faculty Fellow, CHM

This information is important for any MSU-paid or community-based faculty member with assigned clinical teaching effort, and for those who support or evaluate such people in working toward promotion.

Sponsored by the College of Human Medicine Office of Faculty Affairs and Development and Office of Medical Education Research and Development.
